On 11 April 2003, a number of Iraqi scientists and university professors sent an SOS e-mail complaining that American occupation forces were threatening their lives.¹ The appeal stated that looting and robberies were taking place under the watchful eye of occupation soldiers. These soldiers, the e-mail added, were transporting mobs to the scientific institutions, such as Mosul University and different educational institutions, to destroy scientific research centres and confiscate all papers and documents to nip in the bud any Iraqi scientific renaissance. The e-mail also noted that occupation forces had drawn up lists of the names, addresses and research areas of the Iraqi scientists to assist them in their harassment tasks in light of the anarchy that existed after the occupation.

The assassination campaign

Among the many tragedies that have befallen Iraqi society as a consequence of the US-led 2003 invasion, has been the physical elimination of hundreds or thousands of Iraqi academics in what has every appearance of being a systematic campaign of targeted assassination.

Iraqi academics began to fall victim to well-organised teams of assassins who ambushed them as they went about their daily lives, typically killing them instantly. Such killings account for the substantial majority of recorded deaths.

Whilst some initial speculation suggested that the killings targeted scientists who had been involved in weapons programmes, the victims included many that could not have been².

By May 2004 the Iraqi academic community had come to recognise itself as a targeted group³, and by September the Association of University Teachers (AUT), established by Issam al Rawi in June 2003, had recorded the deaths of some 250 academics that had been killed since the occupation began⁴. On 17 January 2005⁵ Dr. Al Rawi, head of the Iraqi University Professors Union stated: “Approximately 300 academics have been killed (...) In a country with distinct political, ethnic and religious fault lines, the university killings seem to follow no pattern. The dead have been Shiites and Sunnis, Kurds and Arabs, and supporters of various political parties. They have a common thing: they are Iraqis». On the 30th of October 2006 Dr. Al-Rawi himself was assassinated. The occupation forces and the “Iraqi” Special Police Forces raided his office on 19 October 2006. He issued a communiqué on 28 October 2006, condemning the raid.⁶

The incident on Tuesday 14 November 2006, when paramilitary gunmen in the uniforms of Iraqi National Police commandos raided a building belonging to the Ministry of Education in Baghdad’s Karrada district and arrested around 100 members of staff from two departments and around 50 visitors, in broad daylight, 1km from the Green Zone, exposed the extent of the danger facing educators, and particularly those in higher education. An unknown number of those arrested was later found killed, and again, there was no investigation.⁷ Again, there was ample evidence of involvement of Iraqi official bodies, creating chaos and mayhem instead of establishing security. It is equally clear that US authorities in Iraq had no interest in carrying out an investigation or restraining the killers.

Even beyond the loss of life and accumulated human knowledge that such loss represents, the effect of these killings on Iraq’s academic community has been catastrophic, with thousands fleeing the country and those who remain frightened into silence.

To date, the BRussels Tribunal has campaigned most actively to raise these killings as an issue and has kept a comprehensive database recording the killings of Iraqi university teachers and administrators⁸, which on 30 January 2012 contains 467 names. They established this list in order that mandated human rights authorities investigate the killings and find a way to protect Iraq's academic and cultural wealth. Despite serious attempts to try to make Human Rights bodies investigate these killings and take actions, nothing has been done to date and no case has been seriously investigated inside Iraq.

US occupation's responsibility

Iraqi professors direct most of their ire towards the U.S. occupation. "Iraqi professors are being killed by everyone, and nobody has told us if any killers have been caught. Nothing has been done," Dr.Saad Jawad, an Iraqi professor of political science said. "One U.S. soldier was kidnapped and Baghdad is on full alert, but the killing of an Iraqi professor? Nothing happens."⁹

Omar Al Hajj, a professor at the University of Technology said: "Death squads accused of killing Iraqi professionals and scientists are the same forces that invaded Iraq, looted its museums and stole its banks. They are also the same parties, which abduct businessmen and foreigners for high ransoms."¹⁰

All academic disciplines targeted

The killings were widely dispersed by geographic area and by academic discipline and that the rate of killings of academics has increased over time.¹¹ Very high proportion of senior academics have been killed, with the bulk of victims having attained PhDs and over two thirds holding the positions of rector/chancellor, dean or vice dean, department head or professor. In the vast majority of cases it appears that the victims have been specifically singled out, either as the immediate target of professional assassins or as the object of so-called kidnappings, which resulted in their deaths.

A former general described the pattern in the following terms: "Many of them get killed near their houses or on the way to their work, and others get kidnapped, and we find their dead bodies in the street. When you follow these crimes you will be sure that the criminals have special training and their purpose is to make Iraq empty of any professionals."¹²

Death threats

Alongside the targeted assassinations of academics have come explicit and implicit threats of assassination. Such threats have taken a variety of forms. Although no statistics are available, it appears that the threats are most commonly issued in the forms of letters. The letters are typically pushed under doors or even delivered through the internal mail within academic institutions¹³.

Religious fundamentalism

The climate of fear within universities is also exacerbated by the incursion of religious fundamentalism, which can take a variety of forms. One form is for demands to be issued by anonymous or unknown groups for students to be segregated by gender and for the institution to stop teaching ‘Western ideals’¹⁴. Students are reported to have felt such pressures to the extent that thousands have requested transfers to campuses where their sect is in the majority¹⁵. Such incursions also contribute to undermining the non-sectarian and essentially secular character of the Iraqi system of higher education.

Forced emigration

The number of prominent Iraqi academics and professionals who fled the country surpasses 20,000. Of the 6700 Iraqi professors who have fled since 2003, the Los Angeles Times reported in October 2008 that only 150 of them had returned¹⁶. But it’s not safe to return. The BRussells Tribunal warned already on 26 April 2009 that “those academics who return are finding jobs few and the welcome far from warm”¹⁷. The statement further alarmed the academics who are invited or forced to return, to be aware of criminal acts like kidnappings or assassinations.¹⁸

Iraq’s US Administrator Paul Bremer’s de-Baathification policy disembowelled the middle class that cemented Iraqi society, and thrust some 15.500 researchers, scientists, teachers and professors into unemployment.

Sectarianism and corruption

On July 4 2011, a blaze started in the certificates office of the Ministry of Higher Education.¹⁹ Iraqi Newspaper Azzaman reported on 8 October 2011: “More than 30,000 Iraqi civil servants, among them high-level officials, have obtained their jobs on fake certificates and degrees, according to the parliamentary commission on integrity and transparency.”²⁰ Officials at Iraq’s ministry of higher education have been singled out for blame, the ministry having also licensed a string of shadowy universities in recent years.²¹

On the early morning of 31 July 2011, a group of unknown armed men assassinated the Director-General of Administration in Iraq’s Ministry of Higher Education & Scientific Research—Dawood Salman Rahim and his son, Hassanein—as they drove in their car in west Baghdad’s Ghazaliya district.²² Dr Rahim told his friends that he might get killed because he refused a request of Iraq’s Minister of Higher Education & Scientific Research Ali Al-Adeeb to equate the Shia Hawza religion certificates with the Scientific PhD certificates. The minister threatened him to force his collaboration in this issue. Security officers of the Ministry raided his house two days before his assassination, and took his car registration certificate, and his rationing ticket. He was assassinated by silencer gun two days after the raid. The equation of the diplomas has recently been authorized.

Virulent sectarian policies

The current Minister of Higher Education and Scientific Research is Ali al-Adeeb, a senior member of the Islamic Dawa Party. He returned from Iran to Iraq in 2003 immediately with American invasion.

Iraqi sources claim that even Ali Al-Adeeb's diploma has been forged. His diploma certificate was issued on 30-09-2010, after his appointment as minister, and it shows that he had graduated from the College of Education/Baghdad University on 30/06/1965, meaning he was 19 years old, as he was born in 1946, and this is impossible in Iraq.

Ongoing harassment of Academics

On 26 January 2011, Iraqi security forces arrested more than 100 intellectuals from the Province of Diyala. Among those arrested are four top medical professors teaching at the Diyala University's Medical College, professors Mazen Razzouqi, Adel al-Hussaini, Ali al-Husaini and Bahaa Abed. It is not clear why Iraqi security forces arrested those intellectuals.

The President of Tikrit University resigned on 14 October 2011 after the sacking of 300 university lecturers by Minister of Higher Education Ali Al-Adeeb, 140 employees and professors at the University of Tikrit alone²³. The President of the University stated that they were all very good lecturers. Iraqi sources claim that the minister has discharged some 1.200 lecturers since he became a Minister. He also wanted to impose Islamic law in Iraqi universities through the imposition of sectarianism and the veil and the separation of the sexes, leading to discontent in university circles.

The current Iraqi authorities has a policy of excluding experienced professors, and replace them with people with party affiliations, or some other ignorant people with fake university qualifications. Many Iraqi academics are obliged to retire against their will because the government orders them to do so, while they are at the height of their capacities. The situation of the Iraqi academics abroad is also dire, because the ones who live in Europe, the US and Asia lost their retirement rights in Iraq.

Independent international investigation is necessary

To this date, there has been no systematic investigation of this phenomenon by the occupation authorities. Not a single arrest has been reported in regard to this terrorization of the intellectuals.

The starting point for any investigation into the killings of Iraqi academics is with those forces and their political leaders themselves.

Recommendation by the NGOs signatories to this statement:

- Ensure that all human rights violations in Iraq during the invasion and occupation be investigated by an international independent body.
- All measures must be taken to end the current state of impunity, both within Iraq, and with regard to the culpability and responsibilities of the occupying powers in particular.
- Appoint a UN Special Rapporteur for the Human Rights situation in Iraq.

²³ <http://www.aknews.com/en/aknews/8/274009/>

- Request the High Commissioner to present to the Council a detailed report on the Human Rights violations in Iraq since 2003 according to UNAMI and the civil society reports.
 - Request the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to focus on this matter in the future reports.
